

Flickr policy

Content

The National Archives account is managed by the Marketing and Communications and Education departments on behalf of colleagues across the organisation.

If you join us on Flickr, you can expect some or all of the following:

- Become a member of our photo stream to view images from the archives and help us to identify unknown subject matter.
- Join our Flickr group and be able to upload and share images you have taken of the documents

Copyright

Our collection

The majority of our images are Crown copyright. Images from the collections of The National Archives posted on the photo-sharing website Flickr may be downloaded and reused without permission in any format for purposes of research, private study or education (non-commercial use) only. Please check our website for the full rights statement.

To use images for any other purpose you must gain permission from the Image Library, The National Archives, Kew, Richmond, Surrey TW9 4DU.

Email: image-library@nationalarchives.gov.uk

If any images are inadvertently uploaded that are the copyright of a third party we will remove these as soon as this is brought to our attention.

Sharing your own images

Our full terms and conditions for sharing photos on Flickr can be found online: <http://www.flickr.com/groups/nationalarchives/> . By adding your photo to The National Archives Flickr group you are deemed to have accepted these conditions.

Comments, geotagging and notes

We encourage our members to comment, add notes and tags to our images.

Any comments made are the authors opinion alone and do not represent those of The National Archives. Comments will not be edited or censored, however, any posts and threads that may cause offence, are about a named individual or use offensive language will be removed.

We reserve the right to block any users who are seen to persistently post offensive comments.

Availability

We will update and monitor our Flickr account during office hours, Monday to Friday. Flickr may occasionally be unavailable and we accept no responsibility for lack of service to Flickr downtime.
