

FRAMEWORK OF STANDARDS FOR ARCHIVES

Our new framework of standards, incorporating suggestions made by consultation respondents, has now been drawn together. This framework of standards, as proposed in our consultation paper, will inform and support The National Archives' (TNA) new standard for records repositories, which is currently being prepared by TNA inspection and advisory staff.

The majority of the following standards were proposed in The National Archives' November 2003 consultation paper on the framework of standards. Others were proposed for inclusion by one or more respondents to that consultation paper. This list will now be referred to as "The National Archives' Framework of Standards".

A secondary list of best practice guidance follows the list of standards below. This second list contains publications which, while not actually standards in themselves, offer guidance which TNA recognises as being of particular value to all those concerned with the wellbeing of archives.

Both the standards list and the best practice guidance list will remain dynamic as we pilot-test and evaluate the framework this year. We will continue to take account of suggestions and comments raised by consultation respondents and other colleagues, and look forward to a dialogue with the archival community as we make progress with this work.
