Introduction

This guidance provides practical information about when it is permissible to re-use images of the Royal Arms.

The Royal Arms

The Royal Coat of Arms of the United Kingdom, and the Royal Coat of Arms of Scotland, are the official coats of arms of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. The Royal Arms may only be used by:

- Her Majesty the Queen, in her official capacity as monarch (variants of the Royal Arms may be used by other members of the Royal Family)
- government departments and agencies on letterheads, in the context of departmental logos

The Royal Arms may also be used on government publications issued by, or on behalf of, government departments and agencies. If departments have any queries about what is permitted they should call the Lord Chamberlain's Office on 0207 930 4832

- individuals, companies and organisations that have been awarded a Royal Warrant by Her Majesty the Queen

They may use the Royal Arms in accordance with the terms of the Warrant that has been issued to them

- re-users only in the context of copying a government report or legislation, for instance:
  - in a press report where the front page of a government report is used to support an accompanying article
  - in a photocopied version of a report made, for example, by a library

Any other use or re-use of the Royal Arms, or part of the Royal Arms, or Crest is not permitted
