A brief history of the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings

It appears that there is no published history of the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings (SPAB) in any form. The following outline is based almost exclusively upon the Society's Annual Reports.

The Society was founded in 1877 by William Morris at a time when the ancient buildings of England, and particularly its parish churches, were suffering from the misguided treatment then known as 'restoration'. Although the idea of restoration originated in a desire to repair neglected buildings, it seems to have been fostered by the quite independent influences of a religious revival and a new found interest in Gothic architecture. In the 33 years between 1840 and 1873, for instance, a total of 7144 cathedral and parish churches (about half the whole number in England and Wales) were 'restored' at a total cost of £25,000,000. (This figure is based on a return made to the House of Commons on the motion of Mr Beresford Hope, 23 March 1876.) Moreover, at the time of the Society's formation, the craze for 'restoration' was at its peak.

Although William Morris was probably the chief pioneer of architectural preservation in this country, other men had already shown a similar concern for the protection of the architectural heritage. As early as 1855, for example, John Ruskin proposed to the Society of Antiquaries that a committee be formed for the preservation of ancient monuments, and offered an annual contribution of £25. FG Stephens, the art critic, also denounced restoration in the Athenaeum a number of years before William Morris's letter was published in March 1877 in the same periodical. According to his biographers (chiefly A Clutton-Brock and JW Mackail) Morris first drafted the letter in which he suggested the formation of a Society to deal with cases of 'over restoration' of buildings in Autumn 1876, following visits to Lichfield Cathedral and Burford Church. However, the letter was finally despatched to the Athenaeum on 5 March 1877, on his own admission, as a result of the announcement of Sir Gilbert Scott's proposals for restoring Tewkesbury Abbey. This letter asked the following question: 'Would it not be of some use once and for all, and with the least delay possible, to set foot an association for the purpose of watching over and protecting these relics [ancient buildings] which, scanty as they now become, are still wonderful treasures, all the more priceless in this age of the world, when the newly-invented study of living history is the chief joy of so many of our lives?'

Morris asked a number of men, with similar views to his own - painters archaeologists and architects - to attend a meeting in Queen Square to discuss what ought to be done. The meeting, held on 22 March, was attended by only 10 men who included FG Stephens, Alfred Marks, Philip Webb and George Young Wardle; but a number of others sent letters supporting the move initiated by Morris. The SPAB was formed, and Morris was elected Secretary and Treasurer, and was also directed to draw up an appeal for the abandonment of restoration and the adoption of a more conservative method of repair. The appeal was later approved and printed, and has remained the manifesto of the Society, with only very minor alterations, up to this day.

The Society attempted, in its earliest years to make its objects fully understood. Articles, for instance, were written by Professor Sidney Colvin and the Rev WJ Loftie and published in the Nineteenth Century and Macmillan's Magazine; papers were read before the Royal Institute of British Architects by Mr JJ Stevenson and before the Social Science Congress at Aberdeen by Mr George Aitchison; and the press also provided a largely sympathetic medium through which the SPAB's objectives could be publicised. By the end of 1877 it had attracted the support of a number of influential individuals, including James Bryce, Thomas Carlyle, John Ruskin, E Burne Jones, Coventry Patmore, W Holman Hunt, and many others who provided the Society with considerable prestige.

Not only did the Committee strive to make its aims and objectives more widely known, but it also protested strongly against cases of destructive restoration which came before it. During 1879, for example, the Society was instrumental in saving St Mary-at-Hill Church in London, the buildings of the old Grammar School at Tiverton, and the old church at Grasmere which the poet Wordsworth had regularly attended. Frequent visits were made to threatened buildings, and reports were issued by the Society. These contained advice of a practical nature on the methods which the SPAB felt ought to be adopted in carrying out necessary works of repair and also criticism of proposed works of restoration. Increasingly, however, as a result of a wider knowledge of its principles and an appreciation of results achieved by its methods, the Society was asked by custodians of ancient buildings to give advice on proposed works of repair. The extent of its growing influence was also indicated by the fact that its advice was sought not only by incumbents of churches but also by local authorities, private owners and other bodies such as the National Trust. Certainly by the 1920s the bulk of the Society's work consisted of reporting on buildings and giving advice on how they should be treated; and public protest figured less and less amongst its activities.

This can to some extent be explained by the Society's success in persuading the church authorities to take action for the protection of ecclesiastical buildings. In 1913, for instance, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York received a deputation from the Society pressing for the formation of advisory boards for this very purpose. As a result, the authorities adopted the Society's proposals and Diocesan Advisory Committees were set up to consider proposed alterations or repairs to church buildings. By June 1922 there were 27 Committees working in 37 different dioceses. In 1922 a Central Council for the Care of Churches was also set up, (although its original title was the Central Committee for the Protection of churches and their Treasures). It consisted of two elected delegates from each Diocesan Committee and other coopted members, and existed to coordinate the work of the Diocesan Committees, to deal with particular cases referred to it and to obtain special technical advice. The Society has worked in close contact with these bodies, and the Church authorities themselves have continued to take a more responsible attitude towards church repair. In 1951, for instance, the Church Assembly appointed a Commission to advise on the problems concerned with repair of churches and with proposals for securing their regular inspection; and in 1956, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York set up the Historic Churches Preservation Trust for the purpose of raising funds for the repair of churches.

Historic buildings had also received some protection at law by the 1920s; and the SPAB's role in bringing about the legislation should not be underestimated. The first Bill for the protection of buildings, which finally became law in 1882 as the Ancient Monuments Protection Act, was promoted by Sir John Lubbock, an active founder member of the Society's Committee. The Hon Secretary of the SPAB, Lord Crawford and Balcarres, drafted the Bill which became the Ancient Monuments Act 1900; and this enabled the State authorities to take historic buildings into custody, and allowed County Councils to become guardians of, or buy, historical monuments. The Society has had a hand in all subsequent legislation with a bearing on the protection of ancient buildings. The relevant Acts include

- 1) 1913 Ancient Monuments Consolidation and Amendment Act (which set up an Ancient Monuments Department of the Office of Works and introduced the idea of scheduling);
- 2) 1931 Ancient Monuments Act (which enabled the Minister of Works to prepare schemes for the protection of the surroundings of an ancient monument);
- 3) 1932 Town & Country Planning Act (which enabled local authorities to make a protection order with respect to any buildings of architectural or historic interest, so that it could not be demolished without their consent);
- 4) 1935 Housing Act (which made it possible for local authorities to save and recondition old houses);
- 5) 1944 Town & Country Planning Act (which contained sections designed to secure the preservation of buildings of architectural and historic importance by ordering lists to be compiled of buildings of special architectural or historic interest with a view to the guidance of local authorities when widening streets and clearing congested areas);
- 6) 1953 Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments Act (under which the Historic Buildings Council was set up, and which empowered the Minister of Works to give grants to private owners for repair of houses of architectural or historic importance);
- 7) 1967 Civic Amenities Act (which recognised for the first time the importance of preserving architectural and historic entities, and required planning authorities to designate areas for conservation);
- 8) 1968 Town & Country Planning Act (by which local planning authorities must notify seven national bodies, of which the SPAB is one, of applications for consent to demolish listed buildings and any representations must be taken into account when the application is considered. This has greatly increased the work of the Society.)

Furthermore the Society's hand was greatly strengthened as the architectural profession became increasingly sympathetic towards its aims and methods. The SPAB fostered this development by the provision of educational facilities. In 1930, for instance, it instituted a scholarship for the training of an architect in the Society's methods of repair of ancient buildings. This scholarship was later known as the Lethaby Scholarship in memory of WR Lethaby, who joined the SPAB Committee in 1893 and died in 1931. Several awards were made between 1930 and 1939, but thereafter the scholarship lapsed. In 1950, however, it was revived; and further scholarships have since been instituted, including the Banister Fletcher Scholarship and the Plunket Scholarship. The Society has also organised a variety of conferences and courses on the treatment and repair of old buildings. In addition the SPAB has produced numerous technical publications, the very first Notes on the Repair of Ancient Buildings being issued in 1903.

The Society also benefited from an increase of interest by members of the public in the preservation of ancient buildings. Although impossible to assess, the propoganda and publicity programmes of the SPAB must have contributed in some way to the growing public awareness of the architectural heritage of this country. It appears that the Society only began actively to interest the general public in its work from the early 1920s, by the provision of lectures for example, and by the publishing of articles in newspapers and magazines. The following figures indicate a noticeable membership rise during that period.

Year	Membership
1890	371
1900	435
1910	443
1920	520

However, it is likely that the Society's influence was very much greater than the number of its members and the size of its income might lead one to expect. It was, and still is, consulted by such national bodies as the Council for the Preservation of Rural England (founded in 1926, and on which the SPAB is represented) on any matter connected with the preservation of ancient buildings. The National Trust (founded in 1895) frequently seeks advice on methods to be adopted in the repair and maintenance of its ancient buildings. The Society also successfully encouraged the formation of local trusts in historic towns in order to secure and preserve as many ancient buildings as possible. During the 1920s a number of such bodies were set up specifically to purchase and maintain ancient buildings. These included the Oxford Preservation Trust, the Cambridge Preservation Trust and the Sussex Archaeological Society Trust. The Society also enjoys close relations with other bodies including the Ancient Monuments Society, the Royal Institute of British Architects and the Royal Society of Arts. It has also been regularly consulted by Government Departments and local authorities, and has served on numerous official committees. Its influence on the church authorities and its influential role in promoting legislation have already been mentioned. The extent of its success, however, in the actual preservation of historic buildings has yet to be discussed.

Membership of the Society continued to rise gradually throughout the 1930s, 1940s and 1950s, reaching about 1400 by 1960. But since 1960 the increase has been remarkable, and in 1970 there were about 5000 members of the SPAB. Since the mid 1950s the work of the Society has been given valuable publicity by Country Life. From 1955 the Society has issued a Threatened Buildings List several times a year, and Country Life has regularly published an illustrated selection from this list in an effort to help the Society find a way of saving worthwhile buildings which might otherwise be destroyed. New activities have also been introduced to attract new members. These include an annual illustrated lecture on English Country Houses (with visits) inaugurated in 1957; and 'Round the Town Walks', first organised in 1950 in an effort to further knowledge and appreciation of architecture and to encourage a closer interest in the future of towns.

It remains now to take a closer look at the development of the Society's activities and services in connection with the maintenance and preservation of old buildings. It is not the intention to provide detailed information about particular cases with which the Society has been concerned since the Annual Report of the SPAB has always included notes on important cases together with a complete list of all cases coming before the Society. However, the aim of this section is to give a very general picture of the way in which the SPAB's activities have been developed and extended.

It is important to emphasise a number of points already made. The Society was formed primarily to protest against ill-advised 'restoration' of buildings, and particularly ecclesiastical buildings, and from this basic aim it followed naturally that investigations were conducted into the best methods of repair of old buildings and reports made. However, the Society was increasingly asked for advice before repairs were carried out. It also gradually became concerned not just with ecclesiastical buildings, but with all types of secular buildings as well, including mills, barns, dovecotes and bridges.

The Society became particularly concerned with bridges, for instance, in the mid 1920s when it learned that the Ministry of Transport had asked county councils to apply for grants for the widening or reconstruction of narrow or otherwise inconvenient bridges, and the SPAB at once approached the Ministry. However, it was told that the Ministry did not have the resources to make a detailed examination of the architectural side of the question, but that it would welcome information. Consequently, the SPAB conducted a major survey of ancient bridges in England and Wales (for which it received funds from such bodies as the Society of Antiquaries and the Royal Institute of British Architects). Much of the work was carried out by Mr E Jervoise and the results were published in four volumes by the Architectural Press: The Ancient Bridges of the South of England, The Ancient Bridges of the North of England, The Ancient Bridges of Mid and Eastern England and The Ancient Bridges of Wales and Western England. As a result of the survey, many ancient bridges were saved from destruction.

The Society started a similar survey of windmills in the summer of 1929, the object of which was to compile a full record, together with photographs, of all standing structures. In 1931 a special Windmill Committee was formed to deal with the campaign to preserve windmills. It was felt that a special committee would be able to achieve more and take more responsibility than the General Committee properly could. The aims of the newly constituted committee were: (i) to make a complete record of all windmills still existing in the British Isles; (ii) the publication of this record in book form; (English Windmills Vol I by MI Batten and English Windmills Vol II by Donald Smith); and (iii) the repair and preservation of certain selected windmills. In 1935 a Windmill Section of the Society was created with its own membership and subscription. In October 1946 this became the Wind and Watermill Section. Its work in connection with the repair and preservation of mills includes drawing up technical reports on the condition of any mill; giving assistance to the forming of local committees for the preservation of local mills, drawing up and distributing appeals, and making substantial contributions towards the repairs of certain mills. The Section has also organised exhibitions, arranged tours and issued its own publications.

Not only did the Society become concerned with all types of ancient buildings but its interpretation of the word 'ancient' became increasingly flexible to the extent of a separate Georgian Group being formed within the main body of the SPAB. As a result of a motion put forward in the House of Lords by Lord Derwent in December 1936 and correspondence in the press concerning Georgian and Regency London, it became clear that there existed a group of enthusiasts for later Renaissance architecture who had not until that time supported the Society in its work of protecting ancient buildings. In the resulting correspondence between Lord Derwent and the Society's Chairman, Lord Esher, it was apparently agreed that the promotion of another amenity protection body would be unwise; and consequently Lord Derwent accepted a proposal for the formation of a separate group within the SPAB. There was already a precedent for this, made by the creation of the Windmill Section. Members of the Group were ipso facto members of the SPAB and its Committee was to have at least three members of the SPAB's Committee serving on it. The first meeting of the Georgian Group was held in June 1937. Although part of the SPAB its policies and methods of operation were always distinct; and its principal aim was 'to preserve English classical architecture from destruction or maltreatment'. In addition to dealing with special cases of threatened destruction, its early efforts were directed towards the education of the public by general publicity in press. It also demanded more effective town planning legislation and an extension of the terms of reference of the Royal Fine Arts Commission beyond the arbitrary date of 1714. A Mr John Summerson also conducted a survey of parts of Georgian London for the Group.

The Society similarly developed an interest in buildings in the Victorian period, and as its interest grew individuals with a known interest in the subject - such as Mr John Betjeman - were invited to join the Committee. In 1958, however, the Victorian Society was founded and this to some extent took over the responsibility for the preservation of Victorian architecture. The SPAB has maintained close relations with both the Victorian Society and the Georgian Group; and in July 1968, for instance, a Joint Committee of the three bodies was formed. The original purpose of this committee was to facilitate a joint approach on matters concerning Conservation Areas, but this has now been extended to include all aspects of preservation. Its meetings are also attended, for example, by representatives of the Ancient Monuments Society, the Civic Trust, the Council for British Archaeology and the National Trust; and it has enjoyed close cooperation with the Ministry of Housing.

Initially the work of the Society was concerned with individual buildings and very rarely with towns as a whole. The first reference to anything of this nature appeared in the Annual Report of 1927, (although in the 1921 Report the Society applauded the work of a Trust in Great Yarmouth which preserved and leased ancient property and influenced owners of such property to maintain them in the right way; and the 1923 Report encouraged the formation of similar Trusts in other historic towns). It is apparent from the 1927 Report, however, that the Society had already paid some considerable attention to the preservation of ancient areas of historic towns. It had in several instances approached a Mayor and suggested that his Corporation should appoint an Ancient Monuments Committee with which the Traffic and Housing Committees should consult before deciding upon road widening and demolition policies. In Norwich such a committee was set up, and its efforts included the reconditioning of a complete medieval street - Elm Hill - which was carried out by the City Engineer and based on recommendations made by the SPAB. In the post-war years, there has been an increasing tendency for local authorities to approach the Society for surveys of ancient buildings in big towns and cities in order to prepare future planning schemes. In most cases a careful survey has been made and a full report prepared together with a map clearly showing the historic buildings in the town. This is usually supplemented by a list of buildings with notes on their importance and suggestions for their preservation. Furthermore in 1956 the Society inaugurated meetings with Housing Authorities for discussions with local authorities on the reconditioning of cottages and small houses threatened by slum clearance. But despite being increasingly concerned with whole areas of town development and with road schemes which threaten widespread demolition, the Society continues to deal with threats to individual buildings and provides technical advice on all problems affecting their treatment and repair.

The Society was not formed to provide grants for repair work, nor indeed to acquire property; but in 1900 an important development of its work was made with the introduction of a Building Fund. The aim of this fund was to enable the Society to carry out small works of repair to ancient buildings under supervision, and to make small grants in cases where repairs were being carried out in accordance with the Society's principles and approval. Although it seems that the Committee, initially at least, attached some considerable importance to the fund because it felt that it would strengthen the Society's hand, it is difficult to know whether the resources were ever sufficiently large to make this possible. Indeed in a number of Annual Reports (for example that for 1913) it is made clear that the Society, because of its poor financial situation, was not in any position to make grants for repairs to buildings. However, during the 1920s, the financial position of the Society improved as a result of increased membership and in the 1928 Annual Report the Committee stated that it hoped now to set aside a sum each year for the repair of buildings.

In 1931 the Society received a donation of £20,000; and it used the money to set up a limited company - the Ancient Buildings Trust. The objects of the Trust were to acquire buildings by gift or purchase which after restoration or repair could be let at a rent which would represent a fair return on the money invested. Although the company was independent of the Society, the SPAB controlled it by holding all the ordinary shares and by appointing all directors. Initially it was provided with £5000 capital, but more money was to be given by the Society from time to time on which dividends of interest would be paid. Further capital was also to be raised by issuing preference shares. In this way it was hoped that not only would the preservation of selected buildings be secured, but that the money invested would provide the Society with an additional income. The Society entered into an agreement with the National Trust whereby the freehold of properties acquired by the ABT was vested in the National Trust, although the ABT retained all profits accruing from the properties and remained responsible for their management and maintenance. Properties purchased by the company included Jacobes Hall, Brightlingsea (Essex), a timber framed building dating from the first half of the fifteenth century, and the Sun Inn at Saffron Walden, also in Essex. The donor whose original sum of £20,000 made possible the establishment of the ABT also bought and handed over to the Society the old Assembly Rooms at Bath and presented a cheque with instructions to purchase Montacute House in Somerset. However, in the late 1930s these two properties were handed over to the National Trust. As early as the 1950s the ABT began to sell off some of its properties because of the rising costs of repair and maintenance; and it was also faced with a growing inability to obtain a fair rent for its properties. In 1976 the ABT was wound up, and was replaced by a Property Committee of the Society to look after the remaining properties. However, the continuing presence of inflation makes it essential that the Society sells off its properties whenever a suitable opportunity presents itself.

The Society is governed by a Committee of no less than 12 persons but no more than 25. Election to the Committee is made at the Annual General Meeting. The Committee may appoint Honorary Officers (including a Chairman, Vice-Chairman and a Treasurer) from among its members, and also a Secretary. It may also appoint subcommittees to which it can delegate any of its duties. The Council of the Society is essentially an advisory body, and consists of not more than 24 persons, all of whom are appointed by the Committee. Its members are generally individuals who have rendered valued service to the Society, or who are particularly prominent in public life or in their profession. Membership of the Society is open to all persons and bodies who are sympathetic to the object of the Society and who, having signed the Manifesto (written by William Morris in 1877), are elected by the Committee.

In 1965, as a result of an initiative of UNESCO at the Congress of Architects and Technicians of Historic Monuments (held in Paris in 1959 and in Venice in 1964), an international non-governmental organisation was set up to coordinate the movement for the preservation and appreciation of historic buildings and monuments throughout the world. This organisation, the International Council of Monuments and Sites (ICOMOS), was modelled on the International Council of Museums; and each country was asked to establish a committee of 15 members known for their work in the protection of buildings. The first constituent Assembly was held in Warsaw in October 1965, and a delegation of four members of the British Committee attended (headed by the Earl of Euston, Chairman of the Committee and also of the SPAB). A second general assembly was held in Oxford in 1969 on the subject of 'The Conservation, Preservation and Enhancement of Cultural Tourism'. The SPAB headquarters is also the headquarters of the ICOMOS United Kingdom Committee.

Notes on the historical records

The Society has retained a substantial archive at its headquarters in Great Ormond Street, London. The majority of its minute books, however, together with some other material has been deposited with its bank. The whole archive constitutes not only a very valuable source of material for the study of the development and role of the Society itself, but also for architectural and social studies.

The archive includes a complete set of SPAB Committee minutes (1877-) and of the Windmill, and Wind and Watermill Section Committee minutes (1931-); Technical Panel minutes (1959-); Finance and General Purposes Subcommittee minutes (1957-), and minutes of a number of other sub committees including a number of early ones (for example, a Restoration Committee, 1879-1882, a Foreign Committee, 1879 and 1882, and a Finance Committee, 1878-1882). Minutes of these early subcommittees together with minutes of the General Committee up to 1926, are in handwritten form, and some of those of the Restoration and Finance Committees are also signed by William Morris. Seven volumes of handwritten reports by the Society's Secretary to its Committee (1881-1935) have survived. These record in some detail information about letters received and sent out, committee meetings held, visits and inspections made, membership, etc. Other formal records include three attendance books of committees and other meetings (1940-1972) and one agenda book for the Wind and Watermill Section (1936-1966).

The Society has also retained an enormous quantity of case files relating to a very high proportion of buildings with which it has been concerned since 1878. The contents of these files comprise correspondence, reports, newscuttings, photographs, printed leaflets, maps, plans, architects' drawings, etc. The numbers of items contained within each file range anywhere from one to several hundreds. A large percentage of the files, especially those containing early material, relate to ecclesiastical buildings - churches, abbeys, etc.; but there are also substantial numbers of files relating to every other type of historic building and monument, including castles, manor houses, farms, stocks, dovecotes, bridges, tithe barns, cottages, almshouses, etc., and to developments in historic towns and cities. The Wind and Watermill Section has similarly retained large quantities of files.

In addition SPAB administrative files have been kept; and these also go back some considerable number of years. They include files relating to SPAB membership (from 1895); files of Secretary's statements (from 1894); correspondence with other bodies and institutions, including the Georgian Group (from 1951), the Council for the Protection of Rural England (1928-), numerous local amenity societies, the Royal Institute of British Architects, the Central Council for the Care of Churches and various government ministries; files relating to Annual General Meetings (1930-) and Annual Reports (1931-); Ancient Building Trust files (from 1935); files relating to courses, conferences, lectures and annual tours organised by the Society; files relating to its publications; committee files; files of general enquiries, etc. There are also a number of subject files concerning, for example, legislation, stone, church bells etc.

The Society has kept many of its publications. The most important of these has been its Annual Report of which the Society has a complete set. This has not always been published annually; and especially in the post Second World War period the reports for two or more years are frequently issued as one publication. They complement the other records of the Society and include names of the Committee and lists of officers; an introductory report of its activities; notes on many of the cases with which it has been concerned; a full list of cases which came before the Society during the period with which the report is concerned; a statement of accounts; lists of members; lists of publications; a reprint of the Manifesto written by William Morris in 1877; and also reports of the Windmill Section (subsequently the Wind and Watermill Section) from the 1930s; and early Georgian Group reports. The Reports also record full accounts of the annual meetings of the Society. Other publications issued and retained by the Society include a Quarterly Report (issued for a short period between 1937 and 1940) to supplement the more official and formal Annual Report; and various leaflets, pamphlets, etc dating from the first years of the Society's existence (some of a technical nature, others with more general or propaganda content). Those retained by the Society, however, by no means constitute the total number of publications issued by the Society (of which full details appear in each Annual Report). The British Library, for instance, hold some additional SPAB publications not retained by the Society. In recent years the Society has been publishing a series of Technical Pamphlets; and in Jan/Feb 1980, it produced the first of its new printed Quarterly Newsletter, SPAB News.

The SPAB has also commissioned other publications. These include a series of books about ancient bridges written by E Jervoise and published by the Architectural Press during the 1930s, following the Society's bridge survey: (The Ancient Bridges of the South of England; The Ancient Bridges of the North of England; The Ancient Bridges of Mid and Eastern England; and The Ancient Bridges of Wales and Western England). English Windmills, Vols I & II were similarly produced and published (also by the Architectural Press) following a survey made by the Society. An earlier publication commissioned by the Society and written by AR Powys, entitled Repair of Ancient Buildings, was first published by Dent and Sons in 1928.

The Society has also retained a large collection of glass slides and photographs arising from its work. These constitute a valuable visual record, for instance, of its bridge and windmill surveys, and also of ancient buildings now demolished and of repair work carried out on individual properties.

Archival note

The aim of this list has been to provide a general guide to the records of the Society which is sufficient in detail and explanation to indicate to researchers their content and potential.

The Society has been allocated its own individual identity code (SPAB) and its records listed according to function; that is, they have been divided into administrative records, publications and social and personal material. Those records deposited with the Society's bank are marked with an asterisk to differentiate them from the majority of the records stored at the Society's headquarters in Great Ormond Street, London.

The case and administrative files (stored in alphabetical order) have been indexed according to file title. These have not been numbered, since non-current files continue to be filed amongst the existing archives in alphabetical order. Moreover covering dates are not given (except in instances where dates are including in the file titles), primarily because of the quantity of files involved, but also because many of the files (since most are case files) contain all material relating to an individual property and consequently include papers of varying dates.

All other records have been given a running number for retrieval and information purposes.

Location and access

The majority of the Society's historical records are retained at its headquarters, 55 Great Ormond Street, London, WC1N 3JA. Most of the minute books, however, have been deposited with its bank.

Applications for access to the archive should be made in writing to the Secretary. Only selective access will be granted by appointment.
